ptokuskusrawbesideisyet Dramatic video shows a young boy laughing hysterically after police fired an "offensive weapon" at him over a boy's T-shirt, sending him to hospital. The 12-year-old child, who cannot be named for legal reasons, suffered a wound to his stomach after being shot with a "non-lethal round" on Wednesday evening in Barnsley, South Yorkshire. Police were called to a local school after the boy was spotted wearing a T-shirt reading "RIP Harambe", which is a nickname for the gorilla who was shot dead at Cincinnati Zoo in May. South Yorkshire Police said they launched an investigation into the matter and one officer had been spoken to, but said no further arrests had been made. The boy's mother, who was at work at the time, was unaware of what had happened and told her son she would be coming back later. His mother then called the emergency services, who took him to hospital. The officer involved has been placed on leave. Shortly after, the boy's mother received a call from the police to say her son had been admitted to hospital after being shot. The boy was taken to Barnsley Hospital with a wound to his stomach, while another boy was also taken to hospital following the incident. Police were called to the scene after reports of a boy wearing a T-shirt with the name of a gorilla who died earlier this year. The boy was taken to hospital in a critical condition, while another boy, also aged 12, was also taken to hospital following the incident. The South Yorkshire Police said a 12-year-old boy had been discharged from hospital after being treated for a wound to his stomach, and was not arrested. Pictured: Barnsley Hospital. On Wednesday, Barnsley MP Gordon Brown said the incident was a 'tragedy' and that the boy's mother was being supported by the local authority and police. The MP said in a statement: 'While I welcome the police investigation into this incident, I would ask that all action be taken to prevent further 82157476af
